

We are excited about building strong relationships with everyone we interact with: our customers, our community, and our suppliers. Community is very important to us, and we are an active part of our community. We purchase from local farms, donate food to charitable causes, and work with organizations to teach people the importance of eating a local diet. We communicate lavishly – with our customers and within our organization. We want to be a place to learn. From learning what LEED certification means, to seeing fiddleheads for the first time, to discovering what kohlrabi tastes like, to learning about where our coffee comes from, we strive to be a progressive force behind the axiom of “knowledge is
